

Arthur Stead:

He was a true and loyal friend who was good on the grill. He supported those around him in whatever it was they were facing, and he worked tirelessly to help end the stigma associated with mental illness both in professional and personal capacities. He actively changed the conversation of mental illness from one of mystery and fear to one of openness and support for himself and anyone he knew who suffered from it; he demanded respect and acknowledgement from his peers and teachers alike, and he was given it because he was pure of heart and intent.

He will be remembered for embodying strength and sensitivity, compassion and resilience. The world was made better by his presence and will never be the same in his absence; may he rest in peace.
